About Us:

Dennis Becker began his Internet marketing career in 1998 by selling on eBay while still running a full time retail business. Beginning in 2002, he became interested in Internet marketing, and spent 3 years trying virtually everything with dismal results.

One day, frustrated and beat, but unwilling to quit, he devised a new strategy to simplify the entire process, starting with a mindset makeover. That strategy changed his life, and he wrote about it in the classic "5 Bucks a Day" book, available at Amazon, or through a link in the resources section.

He also opened an "Insiders Club" in 2007 to help more experienced Internet marketers achieve their first $1000/day of profits by following proven, sometimes little-appreciated, business models to receive amazing results.

Rachel Rofo has been a full time Internet Marketer since June 2006, and has been on the Internet for over a decade.

Although she's dabbled in many fields, she's mostly known as a membership site expert, copywriter to the "Internet Stars", and offline business expert.

She dedicates her time to learning as much as possible, both in Internet Marketing and in life. She joined the staff of Earn1KaDay in 2010.

Turn Into Buyers with Headlines

Introduction

Just like the glistening covers on bookstore shelves, your sales copy needs to grab the attention of potential buyers and hook them without second thought. You want your copy to persuade browsers to click the “Add to Cart” button, so you must be able to champion the art of writing killer headlines.

Before you begin to cultivate headline-writing magic, you must first understand why headlines hook readers in. Once you master this science, you will possess the effortless ability to create attention-grabbing headlines for every sales page you write.

Giving the Right Signs

If you have ever been to a restaurant that used abstract art to label their bathroom doors, you understand why clear is far more important than clever when it comes to labeling your copy. Your readers are likely trapped in the same kind of urgency as one would be standing in front of the restroom. You don’t want them to have to second guess whether they are in the right place.

Create headlines that are clear, concise, and let readers know what they are in for. The odds that someone is going to stick around and read your entire sales letter to determine if the subject is relevant to them is, well, slim to none. You won’t get a second chance to draw them back in once they are gone, so do it right the first time. Let them know what they are getting into before they even open the door.

The idea is as easy as posting signs on doors that say “men” or women”. Write headlines that use relevant keywords displaying without a doubt that your page is appropriate for browsers with specific needs or problems.

Essentially, think of the main result your reader will be after and turn it into a headline.

Offer Results

Once you’ve established exactly what keywords will draw your reader in, offer them some sort of result. Think about what the outcome will be if they read your sales copy.

For instance, "Top 5 Foods to Help You Lose Weight for Good." The premise of this headline is, "Top _____ so you can _____." I have my keywords to draw them in, and the result that will come from reading my sales copy.

Always remember that the benefits far outweigh the actual product or service. Anyone can sell a diet plan, or some other clever product in your niche. But, the benefits, results, and outcome of using that product or service is what really converts clicks into sales. Your headlines should answer the question, "what's in it for me?"

Blend in Emotion

Now that you've got your relevant keywords and outcome of the sales copy, it's time to personify it all. Writing punchy headlines involves finding those compelling words that launch the other two features into stardom.

I'm going to pull apart the headline used for this report and show you each element so you can see how it all comes together.

My headline reads, "How to Warp Bashful Browsers into Bold Buyers with Headlines."

The first part of the headlines lets you know that this article is intended to convert browsers into buyers. That is the "sign" that indicates you are in the right place.

The second part of the headlines offers the result. You are going to do this by writing headlines. Okay, then I sprinkled in some strong verbs and adjectives (warp, bashful, bold), and we end up with an irresistible headline that draws in all the right readers.

I've taken a bland headline that anyone can write, "How to Write Headlines," and turned it into something so unique and compelling that you can't help but read further.

Hone Your New Skills

If you want to improve your headline writing skills going forward from today, spend 20 minutes right now revamping old headlines. Take a look at some of the copy you've written in the past, whether recently or a while back, and plug some extra oomph into your titles.

Turn Into Buyers with Headlines

Remember that the only way to get better at writing is to practice every single day. If your work pile is low, always go back through old sales copy and apply new skills to it. You will be amazed at how much you have improved over time.

When it comes to writing new headlines, find different ways to approach them. If you come up with 3 or 4 headlines for a single sales page, you may be able to turn out 3 or 4 different sales pages in the same amount of time. Compelling headlines always turn into compelling copy.

If you always add in the three key elements: relevance, outcome, and emotional language, then you are sure to convert your browsers into buyers. Now, go practice on your old stuff, and start creating those new irresistible titles.
